The cows couldn't be happier...

Thank you James & Juliee!

Antonino's—South Windsor manager, James Scott had a problem at home. His wife, Juliee—a long-time vegan—couldn't eat the delicious pizzas he'd bring home from work.

We, at Antonino's, have now “herd” (pun intended) the calling! Not just from James & Juliee, but from literally hundreds & hundreds of callers! To all the vegan pizza lovers of Windsor & Essex County, we can now say...

FOUR GENERATIONS OF FAMILY BUSINESS

Years
IN FASHION

In Windsor, few names are as synonymous with style and quality as FREEDS. What started as a modest department store in 1929 has become a pillar in the local community, known for their expertly tailored suits, and their deep-rooted family legacy. It all began with Sam Freed, a man with an incredible gift for business, and today, his legacy lives on through his children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, who continue to carry the torch.

By 1936, Sam's family expanded with the birth of his son, Gerald, who, after working in the store from a young age, would eventually take over the business and carry it to new heights.

"Over time, there was just a natural growth," says Gerald when asked about FREEDS earlier days. "There was a lot of competition as we started. There were 15 or 16 suits stores in Windsor that we were competing with. And as time went on, and there were changes in the economy, and to some degree, the way people dressed, the competition seemed to erode, and we were getting stronger and doing quite well, and it was a good run as we went up the ladder and had a very good relationship with our suppliers."

As the business thrived, so did the family. Gerald's brother-in-law, Alan Orman, joined the company in the 1960s as a co-owner, and by 1971 FREEDS rebranded, becoming the triumphant clothing store the entire region knows today.

By the 1980s, the next generation was stepping into the family business. Gerald's son, Ari Freed, and Alan's son, Dan Orman, began working at the store, learning the business from the ground up.

"I started working here when I was about 7 or 8 years old, folding boxes during Christmas breaks and working part-time through high school," Dan remembers. "I have so many memories of working alongside my father."

Ari and Dan, driven by the same passion as their fathers, worked hard to grow FREEDS while staying true to the company's core values: quality products and exceptional customer service. These values remained at the heart of every decision they made as they eventually took over as co-owners with their fathers' support.

Although Ari had always been passionate about business, he wasn't sure he would follow in his father's footsteps. After high school, he attended York University to study economics and completed an additional two years at the University of Windsor where he earned his Master of Business Administration. It was during his second year in Toronto that he realized he couldn't picture himself behind a desk.

"I needed interaction with people," Ari said. "I thought back to my high school days and FREEDS. I thought to myself, what better opportunity than to join my family? My father never pushed me into the business. He always left it as a choice for me. I called him up to tell him I wanted to join the family business, and he was so happy to hear me say those words."

Ari and Dan's partnership, much like that of their fathers, has proven to be a powerful force behind FREEDS' continued success. Both men entered the business at a young age, learning from the ground up, working in different departments, and slowly developing a deep understanding of what it takes to run a retail operation as respected as FREEDS.

The year 2018 marked another important milestone for FREEDS as Dan and Ari formally signed on as co-owners, following in their fathers' footsteps. At the same time, the fourth generation—Ari's sons Evan and Derek—joined the family business.

Evan oversees a little bit of everything, with a diverse array of responsibilities including marketing, e-commerce, and more, all while maintaining an active presence on the floor. Derek, like his father Ari before him, has the very important role of managing FREEDS' famous suit department and is an active presence on the floor, carrying forward the family's expertise in men's fashion. The brothers also jointly manage a significant portion of purchasing for the store, curating a wide selection ranging from athleisure-wear by Vuori to formal attire by Jack Victor.

While Evan and Derek are now both an integral part of the business, it wasn't initially part of the plan. Both of the brothers previously had promising careers outside of it. Derek previously received his business degree at Michigan State University and worked for several years in the hospitality field. Evan earned his degree from the University of Michigan, then attended Southwestern Law School ultimately becoming an entertainment attorney in Los Angeles.

"I never planned on joining the family business," Evan reflects on the unexpected shift in his career path. "Growing up, Derek and I were encouraged to work summer jobs outside of the story.

“FREEDS stands as a testament to what a family business can achieve when it’s built on integrity, hard work, and a genuine love for people.”

We loved the store and always enjoyed our time there, but the idea of us working in the business was something that we never discussed. My dad called me one day and asked how I felt about being in California long term and if I was interested in the opportunity of Derek and I coming into the business. It was a big phone call and it took me a bit by surprise. Derek and I are best friends, so the more we discussed it, the more we became excited about the opportunity of working together and pushing the business forward.”

After this phone call, Evan realized he did, in fact, always found Freeds interesting. He felt a curiosity from the outside looking in and decided, with Derek at his side, that it was the right thing to do, and the brothers have never looked back. Just as Ari wasn’t pressured to join the family business, neither were his sons. The decision to continue the legacy was theirs to make, and that autonomy has allowed each generation to bring its own passion and perspective into FREEDS, enriching the company’s culture and driving its success forward.

As FREEDS looks into the future, the entire family is excited about the possibilities that lay ahead. Even as they look to the future, both Evan and Derek are committed to honoring the value their great-grandfather instilled in the business: the importance of family.

Evan shares a similar sentiment, saying that “it’s a privilege to be part of the fourth generation, and to work with my literal family and our FREEDS family every day. It means a lot to me.”

Even though Gerald Freed no longer holds an ownership role in the family business, his presence at FREEDS remains as strong as ever. At 88 years old, Gerald still comes into the store almost every day to offer his expertise. Whether assisting a new employee or giving style advice to a long-time customer, Gerald thrives on being involved. Gerald’s role at FREEDS may have changed, but his presence continues to inspire the team and connect the store’s past with its promising future.

Today, with Ari and Dan at the helm and the fourth generation—Evan and Derek—carrying on the tradition, FREEDS stands as a testament to what a family business can achieve when it’s built on integrity, hard work, and a genuine love for people.

FACES OF FREEDS

Story by Jessie Gurniak

Keith White & Joan Goebel

A LIFELONG LEGACY

For over five decades, Keith White has been a cornerstone of FREEDS. His journey with the store began in 1970, though his career in the industry started even earlier. Before joining FREEDS, Keith had already accumulated nine years of experience working with other iconic local retailers.

Starting out as a salesman, Keith worked tirelessly to serve clients and quickly moved up through the company. Today, he holds the titles of vice president and general manager, overseeing a store famous for quality and customer service in Windsor.

"It's all about friendship, working with your customers, and building relationships, that's what this whole business is about," Keith says. "You have to treat one with respect and if you do that, they will treat you with respect back."

While Keith is modest about his accomplishments, his impact hasn't gone unnoticed. Last year he was named the first-ever recipient of the Business Ambassador Award by the Windsor-Essex Regional Chamber of Commerce. This award honours individuals who aren't business owners but have nonetheless played an important role in their company's success.

With more than 50 years of experience under his belt, Keith has seen significant changes in the fashion industry. He has navigated shifts in consumer behavior, the rise of e-commerce, and the evolution of style trends, all while maintaining FREEDS' core values.

Keith is optimistic about what lies ahead for FREEDS. With the fourth generation of the Freed family now involved in the business, he feels confident that the company's legacy of quality, friendship, and longevity will continue. As FREEDS continues to thrive, Keith takes great pride in knowing that the store is in good hands.

Though Keith has spent more than half a century dedicated to his work, he is beginning to contemplate the next phase of his life. "I don't want to say I'm on the way out," he says. "But I have done everything I can, accomplished all I wanted to do at the store, and everyone respects me."

In an industry that is constantly evolving, FREEDS' commitment to excellence and the dedication of the people are what has given it success. Keith is one of those people who have made it part of their life's work. He has been a driving force behind the store's success, and a beloved figure in Windsor's business community.

With Keith's story forever entwined with the FREEDS story, his influence on the store, the staff, and the customers is undeniable. And as the store sees their 100th anniversary only a few years away, Keith's presence and legacy is undoubtedly will be felt in every corner of the business.

A CAREER OF DEDICATION

In June 1969, just as Joan Goebel was about to graduate from high school, she was unexpectedly called to the principal's office. What awaited her was an offer that would change the course of her life. Sam's Department Store had contacted the school looking for candidates for a cashier position, and Joan was recommended.

As a young woman with aspirations to pursue a business career, Joan initially viewed the job at Sam's as a stepping stone—a way to finance her college education before moving on to other opportunities. But as her job kept evolving, taking on new responsibilities, she decided this was where she was meant to be and what she wanted to do.

For Joan, her decision to stay with Freeds turned out to be one of the best choices she ever made. "I enjoy my job," she says simply. "There's always something new going on."

In an industry that is constantly changing, Joan thrives on the excitement of new challenges, products, and trends. Her passion for the company and its people has kept her energized for more than 55 years and four generations later.

To help her grow and thrive, Joan began taking night courses at St. Clair College for accounting and advertising. This helped her become executive secretary to Gerald Freed and Alan Orman, a position which she began in 1973. Eventually, Joan was promoted to Vice President of Administration, a title she still holds today.

From an ambitious teenager's first job, to Vice President of Administration, Joan's career trajectory is filled with leadership and loyalty. Looking back, Joan wouldn't change a thing. Now, after more than five decades with the company, the idea of a retirement doesn't seem to appeal to Joan. The thought of stepping away from the business she has been a part of for so long feels foreign to her.

Joan's journey shows just how much a career can evolve in unexpected ways. Her passion and commitment has led to a deep connection with the Freed family, and her time with the business has been a fulfilling, lifelong pursuit.

Joan notes that "the staff has been here a long time. We've all grown up together. We're a terrific team."

Joan's love for her work and the people at Freeds continues to fuel her every day. It's clear that Freeds has become much more than just a job—it's been her life's work, a place where she truly belongs.

By welcoming walk-ins, offering flexible services, and maintaining quick turnaround times without compromising quality, FREEDS has solidified itself as Windsor's ultimate destination for tailoring. With decades of experience and a dedication to perfection, the FREEDS tailor shop makes sure that every garment leaves their store fitting just right, ensuring that clients look and feel their best.
